navis, writing a plain or easy hand. "Pray whence comes this word salis? It is used in Hindi and also in the corrupt Persian of India, but I do not think it is to be found in any real Persian composition, and I never yet met with any native of Persia who understood it or had ever heard of it. I do not think it a legitimate Arabic or Persian word: perhaps it is a corruption of sahl."—(Binning). The forms salis and salisi, though not used in the Arabic language, are undoubtedly from the root salisa, one of whose meanings is, "he was easy to manage," or "obedient." Moreover, the forms salis and salāsat are given by Golius as genuine Arabic words, in the sense of "easy, &c.," "facility, &c." Finally, the Indians and Persians have coined many Arabic words unknown to the Arabs themselves.—(D. F.) a.

called sād i muhmala or sādi ghair mankūţa, the fourteenth letter of the Arabic alphabet, the seventeenth Persian, and the twentieth Hindustani. Strictly speaking, this letter is purely Arabian or Semitic, but in a few Persian words it has, in modern times, been substituted for the original sin, to distinguish such words from others of a different signification, as sad originally sad, one hundred, and shast originally shast, sixty (to prevent their being confounded with sad, a wall, and shast, an aim): it has no corresponding letter in the Sanskrit alphabet, and in Persia and India its pronunciation is hardly distinguishable from that of sin; but among the Arabs its sound is stronger than that of the latter, and with a mixture of w. reckoning by abjad its value is ninety. It is used as an abbreviation for safar, the name of the second month in the Arabian kalendar. Also, being the initial of the title suba-dar, q. v., it is usually affixed by him as a cypher to zamindārī grants, as a mark of authenticacation. a.

e 'ain, called 'aini muhmala or 'aini ghair mankāta, the eighteenth letter of the Arabic alphabet, the twenty-first Persian, and twenty-fourth Hindustānī. This letter is peculiarly Arabic or Semitic, and has no analogous sound in Sanskrit. It is of the class of guttural letters, being formed in the lower part of the throat, by a compression of the fauces stronger and deeper than that used in the formation of the hamza, or initial alif. Its sound has been compared by Meninski to the voice of a calf calling its mother, which is a pure absurdity. In reckoning by abjad it stands for 70. In Persiau words introduced into Arabic it is sometimes substituted for alif, as la'l for lāl. On the other hand the 'ain of Arabic words introduced into Hindustānī is, by the common people, sounded like alif.

fe or fa, the twentieth letter of the Arabic alphabet, the twenty-third in the Persian, and the twenty-sixth in the Hindustānī. This letter exists not in Sanskrit, nor in any of the modern dialects of India thence derived; and in words from the Persian or Arabic the Indians frequently change f into p or ph, as pālez for fālez, a field of melons. Prefixed to Arabic words (with the short a as fa) it denotes, and, then, afterwards, as fa-katt, and that is all, merely, only. Its sound is precisely that of the English f. In reckoning by abjad it stands for eighty.

(Ardea argala), known to Anglo-Indians as "the adjutant" "I incline to think this a mistake: garur, wherever I have heard the word used, invariably signifies the sacred kite, commonly called 'Brahminy kite,' said to be the vehicle of Vish at. I do not think it ever signifies the adjutant.—Consult Moor's Pantheon or other works on Hindū mythology. The 'Brahminy kite,' a bird about the size of a large hawk, having reddish wings and back, and a white head and breast, is called in Southern India garur, or, in the Indian dialects, garuqa or garura pakshī: this, I think, must be the bird to which the name properly applies. The 'adjutant' is but little known in Southern India, and the only name for it I have ever heard is har gīlā."—Binning. In Hindū mythology, the regent of birds; a large vulture.

ligent person; one who comprehends quickly, or who readily divines what has happened or is to happen from certain symptoms. As a proper name or epithet it is generally used ironically for a wiseacre, an ignorant fool who pretends to more sense than his neighbours: as in the following answer given by a person of this description, when consulted respecting the marks of an elephant's feet in mire, by people who had never seen such an animal: yiu to būjhe Lāl-Bujhakkar aur na būjhe ho,e; pāyara chakki bāndhkar mat harnā kūdā ho,e, "Surely Lāl-Bujhakkar and none else can understand this: may not an antelope with a millistone tied to his feet have bounded here?" This gentleman is evidently of the same family with the Wise Men of Gotham. Some twenty or thirty years ago there was a very popular little book current in Scotland, attributed to the pen of the celebrated Adam Smith, entitled "The History of Wise Willie and Witty Eppy." Wise Willie is undoubtedly the full brother of Lāl-Bujhakkar, for once upon a time the folk of Fife brought him a horseshoe which they had picked up, and he sagely assured them that it was the new moon, only it puzzled him sorely to account for its having fallen in Fife, as he had seen it the night before far to the south-west over a very remote part of the country. h.s. w nun, the twenty-fifth letter of the Arabic alphabet, the twenty-ninth of the Persian, and the thirty-second Hindustani: it is one of the dental letters, and has the sound of the English n, with the following exceptions: the letter nun has a very soft nasal sound in plural terminations in an, en, in, and on, and in the terminations in un and en of the aorist and imperative of verbs; it has also this nasal sound in the middle of some words, as munh, the face, hansna, to smile, &c., for which no rule can be laid down: in this dictionary the nasal sound of n is always indicated by n: when nun precedes be or pe it has the sound of m, as mimbar, a pulpit (for mimbar), sampat, prosperity, for sanpat, (as is the case in Greek and Latin). In reckoning by abjad, the letter nūn stands for 50; in almanacks it expresses the conjunct aspect of the stars; finally, the letter nun with the short a (as na) prefixed to verbs. renders the sense negative, as bola, he spoke, na-bola, he did not speak.

g mām, the twenty-sixth letter of the Arabic alphabet, the thirtieth Persian, and the thirty-third Hindūstāni. At the beginning of a word or syllable it generally corresponds in sound to our w. In reckoning by abjud it stands for six. In ephemerides it represents Friday and the sign Libra. Wāw not beginning a word or syllable contributes to form the long vocal sounds o, £, and au, fully explained in my Persian and Hindūstāni Grammars.

J wa or na, the corresponding letter in the Devanageri slphabet. In words purely Sanskrit it has the sound of our v. Again, the Sanskrit v is frequently changed into b in the modern Hindustani and Bengall; hence a Hindi word not found under this letter should be looked for under b.

• ma, a copulative conjunction equivalent to our "and, with, but, now:" it is used in connecting words and phrases from the Arabic and Persian. When it merely connects two words it is sounded o, shab o raz. night and day. a.p.

DICTIONARY.

ENGLISH AND HINDUSTANI.

I or An, the indefinite article, is expressed in Hin lustani sometimes by the numeral, "ek," one, or the indefinite pronoun, "ko,ī," a certain one, as "ek mard," or "ko,ī mard," a man, or a certain man. A, before verbal nouns, in such phrases as a-visiting, a-hunting, is expressed by the postposition "ko," as "wuh mu-lūkāt ko gayā," he is gone a-visiting, "shikār ko gayā," hais gonea-hunting; and frequently the "ko" is omitted after the Hindustani infinitive, which last, however, remains in the inflected state, as "wuh pairne gaya," he is gone a-swimming. The meaning of a in the sense of by or per, as by the yard, per month, &c., is expressed variously; thus, five rupees a-yard, "fi gaz pinch rupae," or "sare gaz pānch rupae," or "gaz bhar pānch rupae," you shall receive a rupee a day, "tum ko roz roz ek rupiya milegā." If the prefixed z denote in or on, it will be expressed by "meh," or "par," as "jahāz par," on board ship, or aboard.
